32-cent stamps not enough Sunday

Postal workers rushed Tuesday to keep 1-cent stamps in stock as demand shot up in advance of the first-class mail price increase Sunday. The cost of mailing a letter is rising to 33 cents, turning leftover 32-cent stamps into insufficient postage. Prices for Express, Priority and other mail also will rise an overall average of 2.9 percent.

Region's farmers fearful of freeze

Chill may set record, cut close on crops

News-Press staff

Southwest Florida farmers scrambled Tuesday to protect their crops from record-breaking low temperatures predicted for this morning.

Meteorologists expected temperatures to shatter the previous record of 36 degrees set in 1956. Temperatures were expected to plunge into the high 20s inland, while they'll be near freezing west of Interstate 75, said meteorologist Ron Morales.

Monday's 40-degree temperatures didn't hurt crops, but tied a record set in 1956. Farmers were cautious Tuesday, particularly since winds were expected to stay calm.

The National Weather Service, however, had not put out a freeze warning for Lee, Charlotte and Collier counties. "We're pumping water in the ditches, just like everyone else. Most likely I'll be out here all night," said A.J. Nychyk Jr., whose family farm grows jalapeno peppers east of Interstate 75 near San Carlos Park. "It looks like there's a chance we'll get through it all right, but it could be close."

Workers at Immokalee Produce Shippers were racing Tuesday to pick tomatoes.

"We're picking, but we can't pick them all, because they're not mature enough," said Rick Levine, who runs the packing operation for Immokalee Produce Shippers.

Cold blankets nation

The Associated Press

Winter showed no mercy across much of the nation on Tuesday, bringing a record cold reading of 36 degrees below zero to Illinois, more than a foot of new snow to heavily blanketed upstate New York and rare frigid conditions all the way south to the Gulf Coast.

Many didn't have the luxury of hiding indoors from subzero temperatures.

Being outside in downtown Milwaukee, where it was minus 12 degrees Tuesday morning, was "painfully cold, like you got smacked," said construction worker Pat Provo, red-faced and bundled in layers of clothing.

The death toll from the icy weather that began in earnest over the weekend climbed to 91, many having lost their lives in traffic crashes caused by slick roads. Victims ranged as far south as Tennessee.

Slick roads kept schools closed in many states, utility service was down in spots and frozen plumbing was a serious problem across a wide area.

"The best and the brightest ideas do not come from the state capital but from the untapped human capital that resides in our diverse communities."

Jeb Bush era launched briskly

Celebrities, crowds brave capital's chill for inauguration

TALLAHASSEE — Florida's new Republican era officially began Tuesday with a blast of frigid air and glowing promises for the future.

Jeb Bush, the 45-year-old Miami developer who never had held elected office, became Florida's 43rd governor at 12:05 p.m., taking the oath of office on the steps of the Old Capitol Building in front of about 1,600 shivering dignitaries and supporters.

In a speech that touched only on broad themes, Bush pledged to rein in government and to tap the power of family, faith and community to solve the state's problems. "The best and the brightest ideas do not come from the state capital, but from the untapped human capital that resides in our diverse communities," he said.

Bush was flanked by his wife, Columba, his three children and his parents, former President George Bush and former first lady Barbara Bush.

Also attending was Bush's brother and highly touted GOP presidential contender, Texas Gov. George W. Bush. Evangelist Billy Graham, silver-haired, slightly stooped and walking with a cane, delivered an opening prayer and a benediction. The crowd included the state's last two Republican governors, Bob Martinez and Claude Kirk, as well as congressmen, state Supreme Court justices, Cabinet members, legislators, blue-collar workers and billionaire sports mogul Wayne Huizenga.

Most were bundled in winter coats, sitting on folding chairs in a kneeling wind that plunged temperatures well below freezing, despite the sunny sky.

The celebrity party outweighed the wind-chill factor for a group of Polk County residents who assembled before dawn for a ceremony that didn't start until 11 a.m.

"You have a president and two governors here in one spot at one time, you can't beat that for history," said Kim Miller, a Haines City firefighter who brought his 10-year-old daughter, Jessica.

For state Republican Party Chairman Tom Slade, the day marked the culmination of years of work, and the launch of a new Republican era.

Bush is the first Republican governor to share power with a Republican Legislature since Reconstruction. Bush also shares power with three Republicans in a six-member elected Cabinet, giving them the ability to outvote Democrats, 4-3.

"This is truly an opportunity to change the way government does business in the state of Florida," Slade said. "It will be less intrusive. It will rely more on the individual wisdom of the people of our state."

To many Republican legislators, that means tax rebates. Legislative leaders already are studying $800 million in tax breaks for corporations and individuals at a time when the $45 billion state budget is expected to have $1.3 billion in new revenues.

Bush only hinted at tax relief in his speech. "I want to protect people, not bureaucracies," he said. "I want state government to be more respectful of the earnings of Florida's families, not more desirous."

Lee drops early school start

But district may try to move up date in the future

By KIMBERLY MILLER
News-Press staff writer

The Lee County School District has given up the push for an earlier school start date for this fall.

Instead, a committee will meet Thursday to consider a new proposal that closely resembles the current schedule.

In December, the district's calendar committee disagreed on a calendar that would maintain a 180-day year, but start school earlier over the next two years. This year, teachers returned to school Aug. 17, with students starting Aug. 24.

"The biggest problem was the district wanted to come up with a new early starting date without any real statistics on what the advantage of it was," said Louis Roos, a teacher at Cape Coral High School and member of the calendar committee.

The failure of the committee to agree on a schedule meant the decision would have to be negotiated during contract talks with the teachers' union in the spring. School officials are hoping to resolve the issue before then, but are not giving up entirely on an earlier school start date for the future.

"I'm going to throw out the idea to see if there is any possibility of two years from now starting earlier," said Don Campbell, director of district operations.

The district wants to start school earlier so that students would have more time in class before they take fall standardized tests, and so high school students could take finals before winter break.

But opponents to an earlier start date say the benefits just aren't there.

"I have taught for 31 years, and professionally I can't see the advantage," Roos said. Marco Hughes, a 16-year-old at Cape Coral High School, agrees. He said he needed the two weeks at winter break to relax and study before the semester ends.

"If we didn't have the time, we wouldn't be able to complete all the work we have," Hughes said.

Some parents, however, say start dates are unimportant. "As long as they have their time in the summer, it doesn't matter," said San Carlos mother Reel Hedman.

'You have mail,' so AOL loses exclusivity

The Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — A federal judge turned down America Online's request that he make AT&T stop telling e-mail users "You have mail."

AT&T maintains that it's a commonly used English phrase and AOL cannot claim an exclusive right.

The issue landed in court after AT&T started using the phrase in December on its WorldNet e-mail service, and Dules-based Internet provider AOL sought a temporary restraining order.

When AOL subscribers get electronic mail, a voice announces "You've got mail" and the message "You have mail" appears on the screen. However, on Dec. 24, U.S. District Judge Claude Hilton of Alexandria rejected AOL's request that he block AT&T from using "You have mail."

There was no likelihood AOL would suffer irreparable harm if the request was denied, the judge said.

The judge also refused to block AT&T from using "Buddy List" and the abbreviation "IM" with its free instant messaging service.

AOL said it had registered "Buddy List" as a trademark for the address book in its service, and had applied for a trademark on "IM."

FRONTS: Cold Warm Stationary

Advanced weather prediction not easy

Over the past week, people have been making all kinds of predictions about what to expect in 1999. Now it's my turn. The weather in Southwest Florida will be closer to normal, which is not necessarily a good thing. Recent cold temperatures may not be the coldest of the winter. Another arctic blast will move down in February, setting record low temperatures. However, most of January and February will be mild with near normal rainfall. In March, expect temperatures to be average, but rainfall to be below normal. This dry weather will last through April, when brush fires will become a problem. Plants killed by the February cold snap coupled with dry, windy April weather will create a brief, but intense brush fire season. May showers will put an end to our fire worries.

JIM CLARKE
Weather words

Overall, May will be a little warmer and wetter than average and mosquito control will be busy in the end of the month. The summer rainy season pattern will set in early this year, in the first or second week of June. The summer will be long and hot, as usual, but no record highs will be broken this year. Afternoon summer thunderstorms will be more regular in 1999, compared to last summer. Expect more lightning and water spouts than in 1998. The 1999 hurricane season will also get off to an early start, with the first tropical storm developing in June. By late August, the fifth or sixth storm of the season will have a direct impact on Southwest Florida. The hurricane season will remain very active through September, but fizzle out in October. There will be no November storms. Fall will arrive abruptly in mid-October. November and December will be a little cooler than average. Of course, predicting the weather a year in advance is impossible, so don't take any of this seriously. However, if these predictions are accurate, tell my boss to give me a raise.

COLD: Region's growers busy, but beaches aren't

"Some people complain about this price of tomatoes at the supermarket," Levine said. "If they saw what we stand to lose in the field tonight, maybe they'd feel differently. Growers in this area could lose tens of millions of dollars."

Workers at Country Boys Growers north of Alva were covering their cucumber and squash plants.

"We're covering some young plants with dirt and covering some with palmetto limbs and bringing water up in the ditches as high as we can," Don Tanner said.

The cold temperatures won't hurt citrus groves, which are less vulnerable than vegetable fields. It takes four hours or more of 28-degree or lower to damage fruit.

The cold most likely will help with the coloring of the fruit and its durability, said Norman Todd, a LaBelle consultant.

While farmers scurried about, beaches were quiet. For a while, the only inhabitants of Bonita Beach were seagulls. Fluffed up by strong winds ruffling their feathers, the birds appeared to huddle together for warmth.

Then shortly before 1 p.m., a pair of winter residents in matching green jackets became the lone people on the sand. Bill and Dee Riley walked along the beach with a metal detector, finding a few coins buried in the sand.

"We came down today because we want to not disturb the beachgoers and put sand in anyone's face," Bill Riley said.

Dee Riley said she's an outdoors person who can't bear to stay inside, even on cold days. "I like it here now," she said.

The weather up north still was causing problems with flights from Southwest Florida International Airport.

"It was easier to say which flights were on time than when we were running late Tuesday," said spokeswoman Susan Sanders. "The weather in the Midwest is a problem. People need to check with their airlines."

—News-Press staff writers Andrea Stetson, Nadine Simak, Laura Roane and Sheldon Zeldan contributed to this report.

GETTING READY: Carlos Hernandez, a worker at Country Boys Growers north of Alva, puts palmetto fronds and soil over small squash plants in an effort to protect the plants from a possible freeze Tuesday night.

WHAT THEY SAID

"It is cold. It's about 2 degrees, I think. We just had a weekend of ice and snow. We keep the cars running and try to get out too much."

—SGT. JOHN LOWMAN, Hudson (Ohio) Police Department

"It's not so great here and we are anticipating more snow, like three more inches. We already have 13 inches. Last night, it was 32 degrees below zero."

—RHONDA JOHNSON, information clerk, St. John Detroit Riverview Hospital

"It is cold and snowy, and people are going crazy when it gets cold like this. They are all just scared to death they are not going to be able to get their milk and bread. It think it's 4 (degrees) out there."

—DONNA STEWART, office employee, Kroger No. J-20, Indianapolis

"We are full here, and it is cold. It's below zero, but the kids are doing pretty good here because we have a lot of activities for them. Outside it is pretty rough, and this is slowing down all the public transportation."

—J.R. WINSTON, shelter worker, Salvation Army, Chicago

"It is pretty bad here, but we are finally moving again at points west and to the south. It's 17 degrees, and the snow is blowing all around it. It is not a good time to visit."

—RALPH BEATHLEY, ticket salesman, Greyhound Bus Lines, Buffalo

CARS: Pay or walk

The city will pay up to 45 days after the seizure to schedule the full hearing and, in the meantime, owners can "bond" their car out by putting up the fine court costs, towing and storage fees. The money would be refunded if the city did not meet its burden of proof.

"We want to make sure people seeking these activities know the consequences. They'll either be walking or paying a healthy fee," said Fort Myers Police Chief Larry Hart. "We're trying to rid the city of the stigma of prostitution."

The ordinance took effect when council passed it Monday. However, the ordinance likely won't be enforced until a hearing examiner is in place, and police officers are briefed about the change, Hart said. That could take up to 60 days.

Officials in Tampa passed a similar ordinance in March 1997, said Nancy Silva, assistant city attorney. So far, 945 vehicles have been impounded, with up to 40 percent of them being returned to the owners at no charge. "Those were borrowed (or stolen) cars," Silva said.

Although people grumble about paying the fines, none have followed through with a court challenge, Silva said.

The U.S. Supreme Court has upheld the law after challenges coming from other states. "It was challenged in Michigan about three years ago and the law was upheld," the ACLU's Simon said. "Anybody with an ounce of common sense will rights ought to be outraged by this."

PLANT TIPS

Tips to follow if your plants were damaged by cold overnight:

- Don't prune any frozen or dead branches on trees and shrubs until March.
- Dead parts will protect living parts of the tree should another freeze occur.
