Fifteen people were arrested this weekend during a prostitution sting on U.S. Highway 17-92, police said.

The Casselberry Police Department used decoys posing as prostitutes in the operation, which ran from Friday night through early Saturday.

All those arrested were charged with solicitation of a prostitute, which is punishable by up to 60 days in jail and a $500 fine, police said.

They also were charged with using a vehicle to solicit prostitution, for which a drivers license can be revoked for as long as a year.

Some of the suspects were arrested on other charges: Three had drugs and drug paraphernalia, one was carrying a concealed weapon, and one had violated probation, police said.
